Millions in Treasure Buried in Henniker?

By "DEAK" MORSE
State Planning and Development Commission
HENNIKER, Nov. 28—Some day, in the not too distant future, a great hearthstone may be lifted at Ocean Born, Mary house here, uninspiring Henniker clay?

What will be found beneath? A treasure in pirate's booty? The skeleton of the builder of the famed, now supposedly haunted old house? Or perhaps nothing but the grandeur, for miles around, of Ocean Born Mary lived there many years and died there 1843. At the back of the house are the remains of a pirate, captain, a jeweled dagger on his chest? And for the past couple of years its sole occupant says there is some possibility a motion picture will be done on the place.

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

Pirate Booty Still Sought

Huge Hearthstone May Be Cover For Treasure In Henniker

Mary legend.

"If that comes to pass, he says, it is likely he will have to dig three-ton, play be lifted from where it has rested for the better part of two centuries to be used as a prop—or possibly to satisfy curiosity. It won't be child's play. It is eight feet long, five inches wide and eight inches thick. It is very wet and heavy."

"May Be Tombstone"

It is entirely logical to believe there is something of interest beneath. It is the spirited occupant of the haunted house says. Then he calls for attention to a hole about the circumference of a lead pencil, in the exact center of the great stone. Then when houses like this one were built, he says, they buried place in a grave, only to be dug up years here and there."

"If that comes to pass, he says, it is likely he will have to dig three-ton, play be lifted from where it has rested for the better part of two centuries to be used as a prop—or possibly to satisfy curiosity. It won't be child's play. It is eight feet long, five inches wide and eight inches thick. It is very wet and heavy."

"May Be Tombstone"

It is entirely logical to believe there is something of interest beneath. It is the spirited occupant of the haunted house says. Then he calls for attention to a hole about the circumference of a lead pencil, in the exact center of the great stone. Then when houses like this one were built, he says, they buried place in a grave, only to be dug up years here and there."
Mary, the legend goes, was a favorite of the family. It is likely the great hearthstone, estimated to weigh three tons, may be lifted from where it has rested for hundreds of years. It was placed as a prop or possibly to contain ashes from the fireplace. It is a relic of the past, a symbol of the family's long-standing tradition.

May, the Tombstone

It is entirely logical to believe there is something of interest beneath the apparently ordinary, circular opening in the stone. This is the hole that served as the entrance to the underground chamber. It is located near the base of the rock near the entrance to the house and appears to be the original entrance to the underground chamber.

"It was customary," he explains, "that when someone was buried in the house, the hole was used as a symbolic grave. The body was placed in the hole and then covered with soil."

In theory, if a skeleton is found, it should be that of the builder of the house, Robert Wallace. It is a six-foot, eight-inch, son of Captain John and Mary, who was buried there in 1720. Some say he was a pirate, but others say he was a loyal citizen.

The date of 1720 is significant, as it marks the beginning of the pirate tradition in the island. It was a time when pirates roamed the seas, and the house was a prime target for their activities. However, Robert Wallace managed to escape their attentions and built the house.

The house is known as the "Old House" and is the oldest house in the area. It is said to be haunted, and many have reported strange happenings inside.

Pirates Capture Ship

In 1720 a ship left Ireland for the United States. It was filled with goods that were to be sold in the colonies. Among the cargo were several houses and a large amount of furniture. The ship was captured by pirates and taken to the Caribbean.

The captain of the ship, John Wallace, and his men were taken prisoner and forced to work on the pirate ship. They were kept there for several weeks and were finally released when the captain of the pirate ship, Robert Wallace, recognized John Wallace as a former crewmate.

Robert Wallace then took over the ship and sailed it to the United States. The ship was loaded with goods and sailed to the Caribbean, where it was captured by a group of pirates.

The ship was taken over by the pirates and sailed to the Caribbean, where it was captured by a group of pirates.

Silk For Wedding Gown

The pirate kept his word and gave the captain a silk dress, which he then had made into a dress for his daughter. The dress was a symbol of the family's long-standing relationship with the pirate.

"Let Mary wear this on her wedding day," the captain said, "as a symbol of our family's long-standing relationship with the pirates.

"It is a symbol of our family's long-standing relationship with the pirates."

The dress was made of silk and was a magnificent example of the岛上"s textile art. It was a symbol of the family's wealth and status.

Robert Wallace built the house in Farnley"s harbor and named it after his beloved Mary. The house is said to be haunted by the ghost of Mary, and many have reported strange happenings inside.

The house is a symbol of the family's long-standing relationship with the pirates, and it is said to be haunted by the ghost of Mary.